THE DRESSER

"The Dresser" is a play about the theatre. Ronald Harwood, who was for some years Sir Donald Wolfit's dresser, takes us behind the scenes to grant us an insight into the motivation of the great actor-manager of yesterday.

While a provincial performance of King Lear unfolds on a stage before unseen spectators, Harwood's audience is taken backstage to witness a tragedy of no lesser dimensions. With a searching honesty coupled with, and tempered by, humorous affection, Harwood paints an unforgettable portrait of "Sir", and of those who worship him, depend on him and exploit him. Above all he explores the complex relationship which exists between "Sir" and his dresser.
